

The Great Patriotic War

The War began unexpectedly early in the morning June 22, 1941 by a powerful blow of German armies. Hitler declared that he would have his troops in Red Square in Moscow, marching in a parade. But fortunately instead of that the Red Army came to Berlin up to the wall of German Reichstag in May, 1945. It was the end of War. In Russia Victory Day is celebrated on the 9th of May.

Thought-out the country the War affected every single family and person. The warriors went to front to make their country free from enemies, to save its honour and independence. And that is why it was called the Great Patriotic War. Thousands of villages and cities were destroyed and burnt. During the War over 27 million Soviet people died. The main result of that War was the victory over fascism, in which the Soviet Union played the decisive role.
